High Division To try on new September looks, you need the perfect screen.

SOME THINGS ARE better left unseen. Enter the folding screen—since the fourth century B.C., it has provided both privacy on demand and a clever way to cover up interior design mishaps. Fashion power couple Kristopher Brock and Laura Vassar Brock, cofounders of the CFDA award-winning Brock Collection, came in to take stock of the year's most exciting examples. "I like the idea of a screen in the bedroom to maintain an open environment, but to also have some privacy," Kris says. "There's something so romantic about it." Who said secrets can't be healthy for a relationship?

KB: The craftsmanship behind this—all hand-painted on silk taffeta—makes it really special.

LVB: I love de Gournay. This has a feeling of nostalgia and romance. I would love to see it mounted onto a wall.

KB: Love the color palette—and the idea of red heels alongside it.

LVB: It would be very cool in a pink room. It's an element of fun to be mixed in with French antiques.

FOR NILUFAR

KB: This would stand out in a living room with a more minimalist aesthetic. It's a centerpiece to live around. Special, but not overwhelming.

LVB: You almost want to wear it because it looks like a piece of jewelry. The colors complement one another so well.

KB: It could work in so many different settings. This could be the one dark piece in a room with a light palette.

LVB: This makes a big impact. It's hard to nail simplicity. I can imagine it in a naturally lit bathroom with a big porcelain tub.

KB: It reads masculine and reminds me of old Hollywood romance. Very Rear Window, but in a modern way.

LVB: Gorgeous. This is my favorite. So intricately done. Perfect for a men's dressing room.

LVB: I! Love! This! Screen! Very sleek and sexy. I see it in a room full of dark wood, under an antler chandelier.

GRAY > ELYSE GRAHAM FOR FURTH YASHAR & 60" w. x 70" h., $12,000. furthyashar.com

KB: Great colors. I can imagine it at the top of a stairwell. It would also work next to a bar cart.

LVB: It's really cool. Definitely worth hanging on a wall as an art piece. I'd put this in a child's room. Great for the imagination.

KB: Such a bold piece. The way the light hits the velvet creates so much depth and texture. It reminds me of a fabric that we would use in our collections.

LVB: Wow! Beautiful. It's important to have fun when decorating, and I could see this in a living room with a coral-pink velvet sofa.
