

The New York Times

1stdibs Inches Closer to the One Percent

A move from the New York Design Center to the fancy mall in the old Tunnel nightclub.

Nineteenth-century French wares at 145 Antiques, one of more than 50 dealers in the new 1stdibs Gallery.
Vincent Tullo for The New York Times

By Penelope Green

Feb. 11, 2019

Early this week, the bricks-and-mortar version of 1stdibs, the high-end online marketplace, will open in the Terminal Stores building: the blocklong, late-19th-century brick warehouse and relay station that was once home to the Tunnel, the grim nightclub owned by Peter Gatien.

The 50-odd exhibitors corralled there — a mix of art, antiques and contemporary furniture dealers — join neighbors Uber and L’Oreal; on the building’s cavernous main floor, where ravers once hallucinated, is Porchlight, a Danny Meyer restaurant, one of a few in what will become a food court along the lines of Eataly or Chelsea Market.

A clutch of glittering minerals at Studio Greytak starts at $3,900. Vincent Tullo for The New York Times