

WESTERN
ART & Architecture
From Cowboy to Contemporary

Lights, Camera, Action: Photographer David Yarrow
Art as Advocacy: Adrian Aguirre Paints the Politics of Immigration Artist Robert Townsend Finds an American Muse
Architecture in the West: From Big Sky, Montana, to the Lone Star State

plus:

Rendering: Architect Amy A. Alper in California Wine Country
Perspective: Photographer Roland Reed [1864–1934]
Wanderings: Cody, Wyoming's Wild West
Collector's Eye: Naoma Tate

The Launch Collection by Studio Greytak

Designer John Greytak's fascination with gemstones and other natural objects inspired a conceptual art project that evolved into a Montana-based business, Studio Greytak.

His company crafts functional statement pieces that highlight the luminescence of gems and minerals. Their Launch Collection includes this Wenge Glacier Screen, made with a combination of 12 Brazilian agates and sustainably harvested wenge wood — both of which are said to provide protection and balance — along with solid black iron frames that ground the piece. Placed in front of a window, the agates catch natural light to create a tranquil setting and exhibit their organic beauty. This Daybed from the collection features Brazilian agate on both ends, claro walnut, leather straps, bronze fasteners, and a velvety cotton cushion, offering a rustic appeal that's solidly rooted in nature. The Launch Collection also includes one-of-a-kind light fixtures, tables, and mirrors. We love how these pieces artfully feature earthy elements while adding an elegant touch to the home.

Wenge Glacier Screen
$39,200
56 x 1.125 x 72 inches

Daybed
$81,840
85 x 29.5 x 42 inches
studiogreytak.com

National Park Blankets by Pendleton

It's fitting that a company with a history that dates back to the frontier trading post days has created a series honoring America's national parks. In fact, when Glacier was established in 1910, Pendleton Woolen Mills was commissioned to make a one-of-a-kind blanket for the park's lodges.

Since then, Pendleton has created a series that captures a similar feel for Yellowstone, Grand Canyon, and Yosemite, among others. Made in their Pacific Northwest mills, the blankets feature the brand's iconic stripes in colors that represent each park's particular regions and landscapes, along with a vintage label. We love how these can be passed down through generations and that a portion of each blanket sold goes toward National Park Foundation restoration projects.

Twin: $239, 66 x 90 inches
Full: $269, 80 x 90 inches
Queen: $329, 90 x 90 inches
pendleton-usa.com

ma
marsden architects.com

truckee, ca | 530.378.3211
info@marsdenarchitects.com

AMBER BLAZINA FINE ART

BOZEMAN • MONTANA TRAILS GALLERY
JACKSON HOLE • GALLERY WILD
SANTA FE • GALLERY WILD

AMBERBLAZINA.COM